A resilient educator feels safe and confident in their teaching environment. And that confidence starts with consistent training in evidence-based behavior management and crisis prevention programs from CPI.

Each year more than 200,000
teachers leave their jobs

2 out of 3
leave for reasons other than retirement

When staff feel confident and safe in their roles, there is a noticeable increase in performance and a reduction in turnover and burnout.

89%

of educators agree that CPI training has improved their staff skills and given them the confidence to react appropriately.

CPI is the intangible in successful behavior management initiatives.

CPI training programs combine trauma-informed approaches with proactive behavior management strategies to foster school-expected behaviors.

of educational institutions rated CPI's risk assessment framework as better compared to other de-escalation training programs they have attended.

“CPI training has had a powerful impact on my teaching and consulting career for the past 25 years. The principles that are the foundation of the program serves as a guide that I use for planning thoughtful, supportive and positive engagement, instruction and intervention with students in my care.”
